

List of Contributors

Sheila Andrew took her undergraduate degree in European History at the University of Oxford and went on to postgraduate work at the University of New Brunswick where, in 1992, she completed a Ph.D. focused on Acadian History. She is an Associate Professor at St. Thomas University in Fredericton, where she specializes in teaching the history of Acadia, post-Confederation Quebec and nineteenth century Canadian women. Her book, The Development of Élités in Acadian New Brunswick, 1861-1881, is scheduled for publication by McGill-Queen's University Press in the fall of 1996. She is now working on changes in the role of Acadian women in the mid-nineteenth century.

Pasquale Fiorino received his Masters of Divinity from the University of Western Ontario, (St. Peter's Seminary) and his Doctorate in Church History from the Pontifical Gregorian University in Rome, Italy. The topic of his Doctoral Dissertation was "Bishop Michael Fallon: the Man and His Times." He was the first historian to research the topic of Bishop Fallon and Regulation 17 at the Secret Vatican Archives. Dr. Fiorino presently teaches as a sessional professor in the History Department and the Religious Studies Department of the University of Windsor, and the History Department of Mary Grove College in Detroit, Michigan.

Paul Laverdure received his M.A. in religious studies from McGill and his Ph.D. in history from the University of Toronto. His Ph.D. thesis, "Canada on Sunday. The Decline of the Sabbath, 1900-1950," explored secularization in Canadian society from east to west, in both French and English Canada through the lens of the Sunday controversies. A translator and editor for several religious and non-profit organizations, he is the author of the forthcoming book Redemption and Renewal. The Redemptorists of English Canada, 1834-1994 (Dundurn Press: Toronto 1996). He presently makes his home in Montreal.

D. Peter MacLeod who received his Ph.D. from the University of Ottawa in 1991, has recently completed a book on the Canadian Iroquois in the Seven Years' War for the Canadian War Museum's Historical Publications series, which will be published by Dundurn Press in 1996.

Nicole Neatby is an assistant professor in the History Department at the University of Prince Edward Island. She completed her Ph.D. in history at the Université de Montréal. She received her M.A. from Queen's University and her B.A. from the University of Ottawa. She is currently writing a book on the Quebec student movement during the 1950's.

Sheila Ross received her Bachelor of Social Work and M.A. from the University of Calgary. She is currently a Pastoral Assistant at Sacred Heart Church in Calgary.

David Seljak teaches religion and the social sciences at the Faculty of Religious Studies, McGill University, and at the Department of Religion at Concordia University. He recently received his Ph.D. from McGill and his dissertation addressed the reaction of the Catholic Church to the secularization of nationalism in Quebec from 1960 to 1980. He has published several articles on the topic of religion and nationalism and Quebec Catholicism.